RECTOR— St. John the Baptist, Hulme
AUTHOR

Peter MARSHALL, M.A.

[Sadly, in the early 1970's, a decision was taken to remove a large number of gravestones on the south side of the churchyard and to landscape the site, in order to facilitate the maintenance of the area. This means that burials are still there but that there are no markers to indicate who or where the graves were. Fortunately, some inscriptions of those graves exist and these help enormously to identify accurately those deceased who are buried within].

[The question often asked is why so many people were buried here, who had no obvious connection to St. Mark's. The answer may lie in the following article. A satirical view!].

'TRUTH'

Thursday 22 May 1890

One of the most singular ecclesiastical grievances that have ever come under my notice is that of the humbler class of parishioners at Worsley, near Manchester. This parish is blessed with a very beautiful church, an extremely picturesque churchyard, and a Marquis for Vicar. Under the combined influence of all these attractions there is such a desire to be buried in this favoured spot, that corpses from Manchester and all the surrounding districts crowd into it, to the exclusion of the natives, who have the first right there. To make matters worse, successive parsons, in obedience to the laws of political economy, have put up prices with the growth of the demand. At the present moment graves have gone up to £10, the right of erecting a monument is priced at the same figure, and the other fees have risen in proportion.

Seriously, however, the grievance, though possibly unique, is a very genuine one. This particular burial ground was given to the parish a few years ago by a benevolent Peer. He, of course, intended it as a "God's Acre" for rich and poor, not as a sort of mortuary farm for the enrichment of future incumbents - noble or otherwise. In any case, however, the parishioners are clearly the people who have the first right to the graveyard, and that they should be excluded in this way by prohibitory rates in favour of wealthy strangers is a gross scandal.

There are several valuable lessons about this case. What impresses me most is the revelation of the commercial value of the aesthetic and aristocratic elements in sepulture. Why do not a few of our poverty-stricken landowners select picturesque sites and lay them out as high-art burial grounds? Why are not impecunious Peers engaged and ordained to act as chaplains? If capital is wanted to develop the idea, I would mention a dozen respectable promoters who would find the money in a week.
