

John LAMBE

NOTICE is hereby given, that the Partnership heretofore subsisting between us the undersigned, John Lambe, Richard Oliver, and John Atcherley, as Linen Drapers and Silk Mercers, carrying on business in St. Ann's-square, in the city of Manchester, in the county of Lancaster, under the style or firm of John Satterfield and Co., and as Milliners and Dressmakers, carrying on business in St. Ann's-square aforesaid, under the style or firm of Cowper and Co., expired on the 3rd day of August last by effluxion of time. All debts due to and owing by the late partnership will be received and paid by the said Richard Oliver and John Atcherley, who will continue the respective businesses on their own account.—Dated this 9th day of October, 1867.

John LAMBE

John Lambe, son of Laurence and Mary Lambe, was baptised at Corve and Old Street Independent Chapel, Ludlow, on 29 April 1809. His father Lawrence later died in 1/4 1849.

The firm of John Satterfield & Co. had been established in the borough of Manchester by John Satterfield of Derbyshire in 1787, and was later carried on by his son Joshua (from 1816).

"At the end of 1838, Joshua Satterfield decided that 'in consequence of my health [no] longer enabling me to give the personal attention I could desire to my business,' he would 'withdraw from it entirely'. His three assistants, John Bosworth, John Lambe and James Morris, took over the running of the business from 1 January 1839. This was an arrangement with which Joshua was entirely happy, his successors having worked with him for a period of many years (seven years in the case of the most junior of them). Their "honourable conduct throughout that time" had commanded Joshua's "esteem and respect," and he felt that they would continue his business in such a way that his departure would not be noticed.

Formal notices of this change were published in February 1839. Those notices, incidentally, showed that Joshua had in fact owned and managed not one but two companies, both trading from St Ann's Square: John Satterfield and Company (linen drapers and silk mercers), and Cowper and Company (dealers in English and foreign millinery). Messrs Bosworth, Lambe and Morris took on both of these."

By 1846 the firm was being referred to as "Messrs. Lambe and Morris (the firm of John Satterfield and Co.), of Manchester."

1841 census: St. Ann's Square, Manchester.

+ 3 house servants

One interesting fact about this entry is that Richard Oliver and John Atcherley were living at the same address on St. Ann's Square as John Lambe in 1841. All the other Silk Mercers also came from outside the county of Lancashire. These two names will be of significance later.

"At some point between 1853 and 1865, Mr Morris left the partnership, and Messrs William Bingham, Richard Oliver, and John Atcherley joined. 1865 was when Bingham departed, leaving the other three to carry on business in St Ann's Square as "Linen Drapers and Silk Mercers [...] under the style or firm of John Satterfield and Co.," and as "Milliners and Dressmakers [...] under the style or firm of Cowper and Co."

Two years later, on 3 August 1867, the partnership between Lambe, Oliver and Atcherley expired "by effluxion of time" (or in other words, at the end of the period which the three had agreed the partnership would last).

John Lambe was living alone, with his staff, at the above address.

John Laurence Lambe was at this time a Boarder, aged 17, at the Vicarage in Pinhoe, Devon, under the tutelage of the Rev. F. W. Pulling. His life was to be a very interesting one and a postscript is attached below to complete the family story.

The Manchester Courier of Tuesday 20 March 1883 briefly announced:

The Times printed an obituary for him on 1 June 1926:

*Mr. John Lawrence Lambe, poet and writer, who died last week, was the son of John Lambe, a Manchester merchant, and nephew of the late Sir William Agnew, M.P. He was born in 1863, and was educated at Rugby and Trinity Hall, Cambridge. In 1890, he brought out Camella, or The Plague of Naples, a tragedy in five acts, which was privately circulated, and in 1911 a volume entitled "Experiments in Play-Writing in Verse and Prose." In an introduction, he appealed for a revival of the poetic drama; the six plays in the book were evidently the work of a well-read man of good taste. Beethoven Deaf, An English Gentleman (George Washington), and Rousseau's Disciple (Robespierre) are perhaps the most noteworthy. These three plays were produced in America. In 1915, he published a volume of sonnets to his old friend, the late Theodore Watts-Dunton. Mr. Lambe was also the author of a book of travel, and a novel of Bulgarian politics and* romance, "By Command of the Prince." He married, in 1892, Mina, daughter of the late Count de Lolme; she survives him with five children.

John Lawrence Lambe, late of New Grove House, Hampstead, died on 24th May, at a nursing home, after a serious operation,
